Mario Casillis photographs defined the fabulous and outrageous entertainment industry in the 1980s. His larger than life portraits, featuring his trademark backlighting and bright color palette, captured everyone from Joan Collins in blinding jewels, Dolly Parton in perfectly coiffed grandeur and the Bee Gees in sleeveless leather to full cast shots of iconic television shows like Dynasty, Dallas, Knight Rider and Miami Vice. Casilli was a magnificently talented photographer who captured this exciting, fun and over-the-top decade like no other.

This explosion of Eighties high camp and glamour features a collection of Casilli's finest work. (Huffington Post, December 10, 2013)We're not worthy. (Gay Times, December 5, 2013)A time capsule to the decade when big hair, polyester suits, shoulder pads, and blinding beading reigned supreme. (Julie Ma New York Magazine, November 19, 2013)It's a tremendous body of work ... and it's never really been seen all together. (Alexa Girkout The Hollywood Reporter, February 6, 2014)A beautifully made, unique visual document of the photographer's art.
